BBC's Culture of Quarantine

The BBC has launched this scheme to run while arts venues are locked down. Six of the Royal Shakespeare Company's most recent productions will be broadcast on BBC Four and will be available on BBC iPlayer.

The BBC is also collaborating with The Space to present new filmed recordings of Mike Bartlett's Albion, Emma Rice's Wise Children and Battersea Arts Centre's Frankenstein, as well as BalletBoyz's new piece Deluxe. On top of this, Russell T Davies' TV version of A Midsummer Night's Dream and Anthony Hopkins' King Lear will be repeated.

David Greig's new play Adventures with the Painted People, set 2,000 years ago in Pitlochry, will premiere on BBC Radio 3. Bryony Kimmings investigates the relationship between opera and motherhood in Opera Mums, while Margaret Atwood and Mary Beard will present a new puppetry show created by Atwood in response to an Edgar Allan Poe tale.

‘Mind-blowing’ journey to becoming an internet sensation

Words by Max Watson

Holly King-Mand felt bullied out of her last teaching job and almost left the profession as a result. Now she has thousands of online fans of her English With Holly lessons launched during school closures. She tells Max Watson how “mind-blowing” her journey has been.

A mother of two girls, and with a husband who’s also a teacher, Holly could have used the lockdown to spend more time with her family. Instead, she decided to pursue an exciting idea she’d had...to start private tuition classes.

“I couldn’t do any face-to-face tuition because of the coronavirus so I thought, I’m going to have to do this whole online thing,” she tells Educate.

After posting a single ad in a local forum, within a week Holly was an internet sensation – her live lessons went viral, thousands of parents and children were tuning in and she was giving interviews to the BBC.

“It’s been a complete whirlwind. Honestly, when I made the little advert and popped it up online, I probably expected – if I was really lucky – 200 children might tune in to watch. So to have over 20,000 views by the end of the day is just mind-blowing.”

English With Holly receives hundreds of comments from supportive parents and carers.

“Parents are not only saying that it’s good for their children to be using their brain muscle a little bit every day. Many of them are working from home and are grateful for the space to do their own thing.”

The positive feedback is reassuring for Holly, especially as only a year ago she nearly quit the profession. Her previous head teacher told her she “wasn’t suited to teaching” and “should consider a change of career”.

“I believed it at the time. I decided I didn’t want to go back – it was just too stressful and I was really upset by the whole experience.”

Without a school NEU rep for support,

English with Holly’s Facebook page

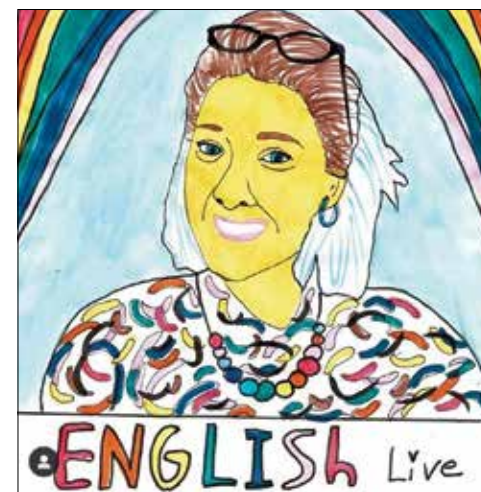

she left. Later, an ex-colleague contacted her to say they’d also left for similar reasons. “A weight lifted because I realised maybe it wasn’t me. That was a big turning point. I decided to start doing tutoring to feel my way back to the classroom.”

“I want to stay in the profession now. I’m really grateful to my ex-colleague: if she hadn’t contacted me, I probably wouldn’t be doing this right now.”

“Given my current success, I hope this encourages others in a similar situation not to be pressured out of the profession. If any good can come of my mistreatment, that would be it.”

Holly recognises the limitations of online teaching – not being able to see the teaching and learning process through. “You can’t correct a learner’s work. That’s frustrating – I can’t correct misunderstandings or misconceptions.”

An advantage of not working for a school or college, though, is not having to follow the curriculum. “The creativity it gives you is beyond anything I’ve experienced before. You can just deliver lessons that suit your personal interests and passions. I’ve done one lesson on Shakespeare already so far.”

Holly loves rediscovering her passion for English and drama, which she studied, and while this online platform “probably wasn’t the stage I’d always dreamed of, I couldn’t be happier with it at the moment”.

Holly studied English and drama – and now gets stage fright just before going live. She loves introducing children to the joy of Shakespeare and recommends this Globe 360 app for a virtual tour of Shakespeare’s Globe

Children with Cancer UK

CALLING ALL HOUSEHOLD HEROES!

In light of the Coronavirus pandemic, our Children with Cancer UK Mini Superhero Challenge has adapted... We know schools have had to temporarily close for the majority and all manner of school life is now being conducted from home.

You and your pupils, whether at home or at school, can continue to help us fight the injustice of childhood cancer and help parents across the UK keep their children motivated, by taking on the Mini Superhero Challenge.

Our challenge is completely flexible based around the number 12; the average number of children and young people diagnosed with cancer every day in the UK. So whether your pupils are doing 12 chores for 12 weeks, reading a book a week for 12 weeks or learning 12 new spellings every day for 12 days, they'll be a Household Hero in the eyes of those children and families dealing with the devastating impacts of childhood cancer.

Each child raising at least £12 will receive a very special 'Children with Cancer UK Mini Superhero' badge and feel proud that they're making a positive change and helping more children survive cancer.

Please share the details of our challenge with your parents and carers. It's a great way to keep children occupied with meaningful activities during this time of uncertainty.

How will you be a #HouseholdHero?

Share the link below where you'll be able to sign up to create your online fundraising page and receive a free online fundraising pack today!
